Growing Senior Population
The Administration on Aging projects that by 2030, 19.3 percent of the population (72.1 million people) will be aged sixty-five years or older, more than twice the number in 2000 and up from approximately 13.1 percent in 2010.¹

The US Census projects the US population aged sixty-five and older to grow to over 83.7 million by 2050.²

The Alzheimer’s Association reports that more than five million Americans currently live with Alzheimer’s disease. This number could boom as high as sixteen million in 2050.³
Librarians need to ask themselves:

1. How does this growing demographic affect my library and community?

2. What library services and programming can we provide to target this population?

3. What community organizations can we partner with to better serve patrons living with the Alzheimer’s disease?
