

Exciting things happen @ your library™

Students learn to find, evaluate, and use information.

Faculty and librarians
collaborate on teaching and research.

Cutting-edge technology expands
access to global resources.

@ Austin Community College

Librarians enhanced faculty development through an “Electronic Information Literacy” online tutorial, collaborated with faculty on a Connections Resource Center for the city of Austin, and partnered with K–12 schools and the state school for the blind on information literacy training.

@ Earlham College

Librarians collaborated with faculty to integrate information literacy skills into the curriculum and prepare students for lifelong learning. “The Earlham College Library has transformed the educational programs, the teaching of the faculty, and the learning of students.”—Len Clark, Provost

@ University of Arizona

Librarians created an online tutorial to teach library and information skills, partnered with faculty in using technology to support research—including co-publishing journals and databases, and instituted an Information Commons to encourage student collaboration and access to library assistance.

The Association of College and Research Libraries (ACRL) and Blackwell’s Book Services congratulate the librarians, faculty, administrators, and students at these institutions—winners of the ACRL 2001 Excellence in Academic Libraries Award.
