

Exciting things happen @your library™

Judy Jobe, Vice President for Instruction and Student Services
Elgin Community College

@ Elgin Community College

Elgin, Illinois

Librarians are too often the unsung heroes of education. Our librarians serve the students, the faculty, and our staff with a sincere desire to assist. As vice-president, I can count on their presentations to classes, their assistance to students and faculty, and their outreach to the public school faculty and librarians in our district. I can also count on them to support me. With one call and a brief description of what I want, our librarians produce materials and all I have to do is read and present. They certainly are the wind beneath my wings.

Judy Conrad Wimmer, Ph.D.
Academic Dean
Edgewood College

@ Edgewood College

Madison, Wisconsin

Edgewood College has an exemplary library. The library director and her staff have assumed a leadership role on campus relative to information literacy for all students by helping to define for faculty what information literacy is, to provide highly individualized classes in partnership with faculty, and to teach students how to access and evaluate electronic resources. Our library and library staff are a central and essential resource on our campus.

Francis L. Lawrence, President
Rutgers—The State University of New Jersey

@ Rutgers

New Brunswick, New Jersey

The Rutgers University librarians have been campus leaders and strategic partners in areas critical to our institution's advancement. Their leadership in educating our faculty and staff on intellectual property issues will result in an updated university policy; their advocacy efforts on new paradigms in scholarly communication have spurred faculty to positive action; and their partnership with the teaching faculty in the use of instructional technology has resulted in new and creative curricular materials.
