Dear Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member McCaskill, Chairman McCaul, and Ranking Member Thompson,

The undersigned organizations committed to government openness and accountability, civil liberties, human rights, and civil rights, write to urge you to immediately investigate the records management practices of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) relating to the administration’s “zero-tolerance”1 immigration enforcement policy and family reunification efforts. This policy has caused a serious humanitarian crisis, and the administration is currently struggling to meet a court ordered deadline to reunify children with their parents. While the administration claims to know the location of all children in its custody, recent reports indicate that border agents are improperly destroying records on the separated families,2 heightening concern that these children might never see their parents again. If these records are indeed being destroyed, the public and Congress must know so that urgent action can be taken to prevent more children from being permanently lost to their families.

The zero-tolerance policy that began in April 2018, and reported DHS enforcement actions prior to this date, has led to the separation of an estimated 2,500 children from their asylum seeking parents, 100 under the age of five. The practice of taking away children has taken place under a cloak of secrecy, shattering public confidence in the government’s capacity and will to reunify the families, despite the court ordered deadline. Recent media reports indicate that “[r]ecords linking children to their parents have disappeared, and in some cases have been destroyed, according to two officials of the Department of Homeland Security, leaving the authorities struggling to identify connections between family members.”³ In hundreds of cases, Customs and Border Protection agents allegedly deleted the initial records in which parents and children were listed together as a family.

As you know, Congress enacted the Federal Records Act (FRA) in part to ensure “[a]ccurate and complete documentation of the policies and transactions of the Federal Government[.]”⁴ This obligation encompasses the documentation and preservation of records concerning the “organization, functions, policies, decisions, procedures and essential transactions of the agency and [those] designed to furnish the information necessary to protect the legal and financial rights of the Government and of persons directly affected by the agency’s activities.”⁵ The purposeful deletion of records by border agents would be a clear violation of the FRA, with dire humanitarian consequences.

Moreover, there are serious concerns that the White House Executive Order, issued on June 20, 2018, will lead to more secrecy and confusion over the handling of children at the border, and the indefinite detention of an unknown number of children with their families. Importantly, the Executive Order neither addressed how the separated children in custody will be immediately united with their parents who have been detained by ICE or who have already been deported, nor detailed the time frame of any reunification process.⁶ Without clear guidance, the public has no assurance that the government is not disappearing children, dropping them over the border or handing them off to non-relatives without notice.⁷

The administration claims to have a process established to ensure that family members know the location of their children and have regular communication after separation to ensure that those families are reunited. According to a fact sheet released in June, the U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP), HHS Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR) and Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), are all playing a role in the reunification efforts. That fact sheet indicates that ORR has publicly available guidance to carry out its role in the family reunification process. However, the same document fails to cite any similar guidance that CBP or ICE is using to carry out their role in family reunification.⁸

As part of an investigation into reports of border agents destroying documents, Congress should also ensure that DHS make available documents that are in the public interest. To enable adequate oversight, we ask that you request and make public the following records:

⁵ 44 U.S.C. § 3101
⁷ There have been numerous reports of border agents dropping of children on the other side of the border without knowledge or consent from their parents. The organization LUPE reported on a case, for example, that occurred in June in Reynosa, Mexico. See Jenny Manrique, Little progress at center where immigrant children are to be reunited with parents, Dallas News, June 25, 2018: https://bit.ly/2L3ibkO.
• All policy guidance used by immigration officials at the border on records management practices, and on the tracking of children after being separated from their parents.
• All policy guidance on the handling of “Unaccompanied Alien Children,” used by CBP officials at the border and by ICE agents in immigrant detention facilities.
• All policy guidance on the implementation of the administration’s zero-tolerance policy, and the President’s June 20th Executive Order on family separation.
• All documents explaining the administration’s reunification plan for the separated children and their families.

Family members, public advocates, and lawyers are in desperate need of more information to help ensure the separated children see their parents again. Secrecy surrounding such policies has drastically hindered the ability of the public and members of Congress to support reunification efforts as the lives of thousands of families hang in the balance. Only by exercising its authority can Congress begin to remedy the secrecy and confusion rampant in the immigration detention system, starting by investigating the record keeping practices and demanding maximum disclosure of information to the public in accordance with the law.
