Nicaraguan Literacy Crusade, p. 2
Task Force Program Info, p. 3
Proposed SRRT By-Laws, p. 4
El Salvador: Resources, p. 5
Close on the heels of the Revolution that in 1979 toppled 45 years of Somoza dictatorship in Nicaragua came a second revolution. It was called the "Second War of Liberation" and the "cultural insurrection."

As in other Latin American dictatorships, illiteracy had been used as a tool to keep the campesinos docile, unquestioning, unaware that there are alternatives, that control of their destiny is possible. Nicaragua's system of education had been geared to the interests of the ruling elite, offering literacy and advancement to those who would serve and uphold the status quo.

The women and men who took up arms against the Somoza regime had as their goal not just the overthrow of a government, but the liberation of a people—and after victory in battle, the next priority was literacy. At the time of Somoza's defeat, half of all Nicaraguans could neither read nor write. In rural areas the illiteracy rate was estimated at 75 to 80 per cent, and, for women in many villages, 100 per cent.

Plans for a Literacy Crusade, under the direction of Fernando Cardenal, began five weeks after the new government took control. The Literacy Crusade's goal was to bring functional literacy—reading at the third grade level—to 50 per cent of the population, or as many as could be reached. The Crusade organizers conducted an extensive examination of literacy programs in other Third World nations—Cuba, Mozambique, Guinea-Bissau, Cape Verde—and invited the internationally renowned expert Paulo Freire to Managua to consult on methodology (a discussion would give classes in the evenings and by day they would work in the fields, planting crops, harvesting, tending animals and helping to increase the nation's productive capacity. These volunteers would comprise the Popular Literacy Army (EPA), better known as brigadistas. The second group would be factory workers, government workers, housewives and professionals who would remain at their regular work in the cities and teach in the urban barrios during non-working hours. These were the Popular Literacy Teachers, called "popular alphabetizers (AP)."

The volunteers for the brigadistas were young people—high school and college students primarily, although some were as young as twelve. Several reasons account for the youthfulness of the brigadistas. For one thing, many had fought in the Revolution and were committed to its goals. (A striking aspect of the Nicaraguan Revolution had been the youth of the liberation fighters—teenagers, or younger.)

Parent hostility was met by widespread discussions about their concerns. Campaign representatives held weekly meetings in the schools with parents and students. Posters, newspaper articles and TV and radio programs addressed the issues. To allay some of the parents' fears, it was decided to organize single-sex brigades, and young girls would be accompanied by their teachers and live in dormitories, farmhouses, public buildings or schoolrooms. Boys and older girls would live in the homes of the campesinos. It is worth noting that children from middle-class homes—who joined the Crusade for a variety of reasons—usually became committed to the goals of the new society Nicaragua is trying to build.

Initial preparations lasted six months. The Literacy Crusade first launched a pilot project in the same northern provinces where the Sandinistas had originally made their base. Undertaken by the 80-member Patria Libre brigade, its objective was to test a training design and gain practical experience that would later be transmitted to the other brigadistas. The group members also underwent physical training to prepare them for the arduous tasks ahead.

After completing the pilot project, each of the 80 members of the Patria Libre conducted workshops and trained 560 more teachers. These, in turn, trained 7,000 teachers. For the final phase, which ended in March, 1980, schools and colleges were closed early, releasing thousands of volunteer students for additional training. By the conclusion of the last phase of training, a grand total of 95,000 "alphabetizers" were prepared for the Influenced by Freire's methodology, the planners hoped to provide one literacy teacher for every four or five campesinos (poor country people). Teachers would be assigned to their own province when possible, but tens of thousands of teachers would have to be transported from the cities to the remote areas in the northern mountains and the Atlantic Coast forest regions where available teachers were scarce.

A serious problem was how to mobilize national resources for such a large-scale campaign without interfering with production. During the Revolution, entire sections of Nicaragua's cities had been destroyed by the punitive bombings of the National Guard. Before Somoza fled, he pillaged the national treasury and left massive debts which the new government pledged to honor. Money to pay these debts had to be earned from exports, which meant production of goods had to be increased.

A clever solution was arrived at. Those who volunteered to work in the Literacy Crusade would be divided into two groups. One would consist of young people not yet actively engaged in productive work, who would leave the cities and live with the campesinos in the rural areas and mountains for a period of five months. They

In addition, the government made specific efforts to enlist young people in order to raise their consciousness about the realities of the poverty and oppression of the campesinos in the rural and mountain areas. (Most of the brigadistas were from urban areas, and while illiteracy was high there, it was far, far higher in the country.)

The brigadistas were the political descendants of the "Choir of Angels"—children who had formed part of Augusto César Sandino's guerrilla army during the struggle to oust the occupying U.S. Marines in the 1930's. The "Choir" worked to "alphabetize" the campesinos in the mountainous provinces of Matagalpa, Jinotega and Nueva Segovia, so that they could read Sandino's literature. In the 1960's this same area became the base for the Sandinista forces—nationalists who derived their names and inspiration from Sandino.

Parental Permission Required

Parental permission was a requisite for minors who wished to join the brigadistas. The Crusade organizers found that they faced opposition from some middle-class parents who were not supportive of the Revolution and who, in addition, had traditional paternal worries about their children, particularly their daughters. (Working class parents were not, in general, antagonistic.)

Groups Support Crusade

The Nicaraguan Revolution had been successful in large part because of the involvement of people's organizations that had formed in the years preceding 1978. Some of these were the National Union of Teachers, the Sandinista Trade Union Federation, the Organization of Nicaraguan Women, the block- and street-based Sandinista Defense Committee and the Association of Rural Workers. The same groups now provided the Literacy Crusade with massive logistical support, transporting 60,000 brigadistas from the cities to the countryside, supplying them with food, medical care, textbooks, etc. They also provided protection; security was a major concern, because remnants of Somoza's National Guard, which had fled into the mountains on the Honduras border, threatened that the brigadistas would be killed.

On March 24 of last year, truck convoys by the thousands left the cities of Managua, Esteli, Leon, Grenada and Matagalpa and fanned out to all of Nicaragua's provinces. Because of the terrain, thousands of brigadistas had to march by foot. Some traveled by boat, some by helicopter. Each brigadista was eventually outfitted with jeans, a gray tunic, a mosquito net, a hammock, a lantern by which to teach at night and a portable blackboard. On brigadista arrival day, a special service was held in every church of every denomination to greet the brigadistas and to launch the Crusade.

LIBRARY UNION TASK FORCE

Libraries Under Fiscal Stress: Using Union Strength in a Weak Economy
Tuesday, June 30 from 9:30-11 am

The purpose of the San Francisco program meeting of the ALA/SRRT Library Union Task Force will be to examine budget retrenchments, reductions in force, and service cutbacks currently threatening the stability of the American library system. An overview will be presented of responses made by library unions to funding cutbacks that have resulted in staff reductions.

Libraries under fiscal stress will be moderated by Joan F. Higbee, Coordinator, LUTF. Three library union leaders will analyze specific problems. Donald Panzera, immediate Post-President, AFSCME Local 2910, Library of Congress Professional Guild and current Chairperson AFSCME Local 2910 Contract Negotiation Team, will discuss "Passing the Bucks: strategies for influencing the political process that determines your library's budget." Kenneth B. Miller, Jr., Chairperson UAW, Detroit Public Libraries Contract Negotiation Committee and Chairperson UAW/DPL Grievance Committee, will explore the "Response of the Union to staff reduction: interpretation, utilization, and pitfalls of contract language and its implementation."

The relationship between library unions and library users will be investigated by the third speaker. Mary Biblo, President of the Faculty Association of the University of Chicago Laboratory Schools, Local 6023, American Federation of Teachers and UIC, will discuss "Ethnic Strength in a Weak Economy.""}

ETHNIC MATERIALS INFORMATION EXCHANGE TASK FORCE

Building Bridges with our Canadian Cousins

A banner program on strategies for developing multilingual collections and services is planned for Sunday, June 26 from 2-5:30 pm in the Civic Auditorium, Room 316. This program is jointly sponsored by the SRRT Ethnic Materials Task Force, the RASD Multilingual Materials Subcommittee and RASD Library Services to the Spanish Speaking Committee. The influx of thousands of immigrants from Asia, Latin America, Europe and the Middle East underscores the need for library services to the tremendous non-English speaking population in our country.

A Canadian team of library professionals expert in multilingual biblioservices from the National Library of Canada and the Metropolitan Toronto Library Board will share with us their unique experience in providing multilingual services across the width and breadth of Canada. With the support of the National government, public library services to Canadian Ethnocultural Communities are having great success according to Mrs. Marie Zielinska, Chief, Multilingual Biblioservice, Genia Lorentowicz, Manager, Regional Multilingual Services and Stephanie Hutcheson, Assistant Librarian, Toronto Public Libraries.

An American team of leading foreign language collection coordinators, i.e. Sylva N. Manoogian, Los Angeles Public Library, Gaetano Verdini, Brooklyn Public Library and William E. McElwain Chicago Public Library will follow the Canadian team with a discussion of alternative techniques of developing multilingual biblioservices.Origins

From the end of March until mid-August, the brigadistas followed roughly this pattern: by day, work in the fields with the campesinos they lived with or chores around the house; by night, two hours of instruction with from five to seven campesinos huddled around a gas lamp. On Saturday, there were workshops with other brigadistas-usually 30 in number from the same village or a village nearby-to evaluate the week's work, discuss common problems and plan the week ahead. For those brigadistas who could not meet together because of distance, all-day Saturday radio programs informed them of news of the campaign and offered advice and encouragement. On Saturday, there were workshops with other brigadistas—usually 30 in number from the same village or a village nearby—to evaluate the week's work, discuss common problems and plan the week ahead. In the cities, the popular alphabetizers worked at their regular jobs and, in addition, gave two hours of instruction at night; they also had Saturday workshops. Within this general pattern, there were wide variations, as indicated by the experiences of individual brigadistas recounted on the accompanying pages.

The campaign took its toll: 56 brigadistas died during the Crusade. Six were murdered by the National Guard, the rest were killed by accidents and illness. Today, the murderers youth are hailed by Nicaraguans as martyred heroes, and their faces are enshrined on posters and paintings hung everywhere.

The campaign itself was extremely successful. At its end, some 500,000 campesinos were no longer illiterate, and the rate of illiteracy was down from a national average of 52 per cent to just under 13 per cent. Confirming the statistics are the documented exams and the simple sentences that all campesinos had to write at the end of the five-month learning period. As important as the literacy they gained, however, was their new awareness of themselves and of their significance to the nation. Prior to the Revolution, campesinos had been considered of little or no consequence; but this campaign, a major indication of positive governmental concern, contributed to a new sense of dignity and self worth.

The influence of the crusade on the brigadistas and other "alphabetizers" was also dramatic. They gained a new understanding and respect for the rural poor—and often, as noted, a new commitment to the goals of the Revolution. Participants also learned a variety of skills—life skills as well as teaching skills. All gained a more profound understanding of their nation—and learned that they could play a role in creating a new society.

Today's chief bugaboo, at least from the standpoint of dogmatic Christians and Moral Majoritarians, is "secular humanism". Free Inquiry, with no apologies, seeks to become the primary vehicle or forum for that "bugaboo". Indeed, its premier issue, featuring a 10-point Secular Humanist Declaration endorsed by teachers, scholars, and writers like Isaac Asimov, Albert Ellis, Joseph Fletcher, Sidney Hook, and Barbara Wooton, won immediate denunciations from such hardliners as John P. Roche, Phyllis Schafly, Roscoe Drummond, and Patrick Buchanan.

According to editor Kurtz, "there does not exist on the current intellectual scene a magazine devoted to the sophisticated analysis of religious inconsistencies and their social consequences. Nor is there a magazine expressing a thorough-going and consciously secular-humanist point of view, critical of the assumptions and practices of ideological dogmas, yet committed to the uncompromising defense of the free, open, pluralistic, and democratic society". Hence the birth of Free Inquiry, which has already published William Ryan's overview of the Fundamentalist Right's onslaught; Sol Gordon's worried memoir of personal abuse, coupled with a passionate reaffirmation of the First Amendment; a summary of the "creation/evolution controversy"; major essays on morality and ethics; Vern Bullough on Papal sexology; in-depth "reflections on dialogue".

The Washington (State) Library Association Annual Meeting was held April 30-May 2, 1981 in Ellensburg, WA. The following resolution, sponsored by SRRT/WLA, was adopted at the general membership meeting.

-Bob Polishuk, Chair, SRRT/WLA

Resolution

Whereas nuclear weapons and their potential use represent the most serious threat to libraries and civilization worldwide; and
Whereas Albert Einstein said, "The unleashed power of the atom has changed everything except our thinking. Thus we are drifting toward a catastrophe beyond conception. We shall require a substantially new manner of thinking if mankind is to survive;" and
Whereas libraries have historically preserved the records of civilization; and
Whereas these libraries and the records preserved in them have periodically been completely destroyed by the catastrophes of warfare; and
Whereas the use of nuclear weapons is a potential threat of destruction of unprecedented magnitude; and
Whereas it is the responsibility of our generation to prevent this final catastrophe;

Therefore be it resolved that the Washington Library Association declare for the future of libraries and humanity, and support the campaign for worldwide nuclear disarmament, and forward copies of this resolution to members of our congressional delegation, the President of the United States of America, the Secretary General of the United Nations and the news media.
evolution controversy", major essays on morality and ethics; Vern Bullough on Papal sexology; in-depth "reflections on disbelief"; Gordon Stein's warning about possible blasphemy prosecutions; lively, combative letters; genuinely critical film and book reviews; and wry newscips.

The Humanist is more visually attractive and readable (i.e., somewhat less "sophisticated"); The Skeptical Inquirer more directly attacks "bizarre paranormal beliefs," while Creation/Evolution better rebuts the Genesis-literalists; and Britain's Freethinker both more fiercely and joyfully assails theistic faith, bigotry, and foolishness. However, FI should easily qualify as the most solid, intellectual organ or that highly-controversial, though hardly new, viewpoint called "democratic secular humanism" and so belongs in every Philosophy, Religion, and Civil Liberties collection, plus all but the smallest academic and public libraries.
