

The 2007 ALA Annual Conference is coming to your library school for FREE!

Join us for Feds: A Day in the Life...

What is it?

The Careers in Federal Librarianship program is a seminar designed to highlight various job opportunities in Federal librarianship. It is an opportunity to hear Federal employees speak about utilizing their MLIS degrees in a variety of career fields, learn about the diverse job opportunities open to Federal librarians, and participate in an interactive Q & A session.

When and Where?

- Friday, June 22nd at the Library of Congress
- This seminar will be webcast from the Library of Congress and allows library school students to participate remotely using Online Programming for All Libraries (OPAL) software.

Why participate?

- FREE to anyone with internet access in the OPAL auditorium
- Individuals unable to travel to Washington, D.C. to attend the ALA conference can actively participate in this seminar.
- Volunteer “remote hosts” from each library school will receive formal training on OPAL; nice addition to your resume!

How to Participate

- If you are registering for the ALA Conference, you can sign up for the Careers in Federal Librarianship program under special events

If you cannot come to Washington, DC for ALA, you still have the opportunity to participate in the OPAL auditorium via the internet. If you would like to participate in this seminar individually or serve as a library school “remote host,” please respond to feds.panel@gmail.com for more details. For more information please email feds.panel@gmail.com. You can also visit our wiki http://scratchpad.wikia.com/wiki/ALA_Event_Planning for program updates and to share your ideas on this event!
