Each year the History Section’s Bibliography and Indexes Committee continues its project to honor outstanding book-length English-language bibliographies in the field of history. It is our goal to encourage both the work of scholars in the bibliography of history and the publishers who support this important activity. This year’s titles were published in 2002 and 2003.

All members of the library profession are invited to submit titles to the committee for consideration. For 2005, the committee will review works published in 2003 and 2004. Nominated titles can be from any period of history. The focus is on first editions, but a subsequent edition will be considered if there is substantial revision. Titles for consideration, with appropriate bibliographic information should be sent to: Jennalyn W. Tellman, University Library, A211, 1510 E. University Blvd., P.O. Box 210055, Tucson, AZ 85721-0055. The next submission deadline is October 31, 2004.

With wealth gained through the caravan trade, the ancient Arabian civilization of the Nabataeans and its capital city, Petra, flourished from sometime before 312 BCE through the 5th century CE. With 2,413 entries, Crawford’s impressive international bibliography brings together nineteenth and twentieth century research literature about all aspects of this civilization, from archaeology to art, prehistory, paleography, and engineering. The bibliography is arranged alphabetically by author, and each article is assigned at least one subject heading. This carefully crafted bibliography clearly belongs in any library with strong collections in Classics or the Ancient Near

Broad in scope but selective in contents, this annotated bibliography focuses on periodical articles and books covering all aspects of Bill Clinton’s life and presidency. In addition to Clinton himself, selective coverage of prominent Clinton administration officials is also included. The compiler has done a commendable job of sorting through the enormous amount of writing about this president and providing careful annotations. The emphasis is on materials that analyze or report on the Clinton presidency; the outpouring of literature about this president in the popular or tabloid press is not included. With its emphasis on the policy aspects of the Clinton presidency and on more serious analysis and responses, this substantial guide to resources is likely to continue to be a fundamental source for information in coming years.—Barbara L. Walden, University of Wisconsin, Madison

The author lists over 6,000 titles dealing with all aspects of the Russian revolution and civil war, from history to the arts, science, medicine, and religion. Books, articles, collections of essays, speeches, memoirs, and interviews published from 1917 to January 2000 are included. Entries are arranged in broad thematic chapters, subdivided by topic and type of source. Brief annotations describe each work and offer critical commentary on their scholarly contributions.
