YALSA Board of Directors Meeting
ALA Annual Conference, Chicago
June 23 – 27, 2017

Topic: Teen Programming HQ report for Annual

Background: During the 2017 Midwinter Meeting, the Board addressed the need to evaluate member awards and grants to make sure that they are aligned with the Organizational Plan and members’ needs, and formed a short-term task force to evaluate YALSA’s portfolio of member scholarships, grants and awards, and submit a report of its’ findings for the Board’s meeting at the ALA Annual Conference. Leah Hembree, on behalf of the Member Awards Evaluation Taskforce, has submitted the following report for the Board’s consideration.

Action Required: Discussion

Overview

YALSA maintains and administers several member awards and grants, but has not in recent memory (12+ years) ever taken the step to examine them and their impact for YALSA and for its members. In the evaluation below, neither the Emerging Leader nor Spectrum Scholar programs are included, because each of these awards are selected through an ALA jury process, not YALSA, and therefore participation data was not available. It should be noted that in the past YALSA has supported between 1 and 2 Emerging Leaders ($1,000 per EL) per year, and 1 Spectrum Scholar ($6,500) per year. Both are funded through Friends of YALSA, and both do support the Organizational Plan. The Spectrum Scholar directly addresses YALSA’s goal of diversifying the membership, and the Emerging Leader effort addresses the goal of proving leadership training and opportunities to members.

Overall Recommendations

- According to the Membership Awards Survey, 39.81% of survey respondents do not know about the YALSA membership awards and 44.6% of the respondents feel they do not qualify for the awards. From the results of the survey, it seems that many of YALSA’s awards and grants, except for specific ones listed below, are ample in number but need more effective marketing strategies to inform members of what is available and what the qualifications are for the different opportunities. Moving the marketing of the awards to staff from award juries is an opportunity to re-think how marketing is done and to institute changes such as targeting specific segments of members about specific opportunities that match them in some way, such as through type of library, stated interest, type of member, etc.

- The travel stipends support the Organizational plan well and continuously pull many applicants; however, according to the 2017 Membership Survey, members who are not new to conferences are not eligible for these and would like to see the addition of a conference stipend opportunity in place for them as well. Establishing a conference stipend for this segment of the YALSA membership would address even more membership need. Funding travel to state and regional conferences could contribute to the Organizational Plan’s strategy of leveraging “relationships with state and regional associations to promote the transformation of teen library services”.

- Collection development grants continue to be needed and receive high numbers of applicants each year. It is suggested that they are expanded.

- According to the member survey ran by the Member Recognition Taskforce, suggested new awards for YALSA to pursue fell into these main categories:
  - Type of member: new, retired
  - Type of job: non-librarian, school librarian
  - Type of work: outreach, research, partnering, advocacy, intellectual freedom, innovation, promoting literacy, fostering diversity,
  - Academic scholarships for students
  - Travel scholarships for mid-career members
  - Best librarian voted for by teen patrons

A best practice in the industry is to offer incentives and awards for whatever your organization wants more of. So, the board should decide which of these ideas most aligns with the priorities in the Organizational Plan, and move forward with them.
According to the survey, school librarians and library workers feel that they are not as supported by YALSA as they could be. This can be addressed in two key ways:

- Reviewing all award language on the web site, in fliers, etc. to ensure that it is explicitly stated which award is open to which types of members
- Creating customized marketing messages just for school library members

Financial Considerations/Impact

- Increasing the number of grants or adding additional grants would require more funding and marketing resources, as well as additional time from YALSA members and staff

Recommended Board Action

- We recommend that the YALSA staff 1) revisit marketing efforts and implement targeted marketing strategies to ensure that members are aware of these opportunities and know which ones they are eligible for; and 2) review and clarify all awards language to ensure it is clear that which types of members can apply for which opportunities
- We recommend that the Board of Directors consider new sponsorships and funding to increase award and grant opportunities as specified in the Overall Recommendations portion of this document.
