

ACRL 101: Making the Most of ALA Annual Conference: A Checklist

PRE-ALA ANNUAL

Design your conference schedule

Select any programs of interest, including some back-up options, using the Conference Scheduler (<https://www.eventscribe.com/2019/ALA-Annual/agenda.asp?pfp=FullSchedule>). Try to pick a program outside of your specific area to branch out.

Look for any other published conference highlights

Review any ALA Annual preview pages in American Libraries as well as the ACRL website for other programs of interest.

Collaborate with colleagues

Talk to colleagues that are also attending about any sessions you can split up. Similarly, talk to colleagues that are not attending about any vendors you can meet on their behalf.

Go mobile

Download the Conference Scheduler mobile app.

Get career advice

Make a career counseling and/or resume review appointment with the ALA JobLIST Placement Center (<https://2019.alaannual.org/whats-happening/joblist-placement-and-career-development-center>).

Stay connected

Start following the ALA Annual social media accounts, such as:

POST-ALA ANNUAL

Follow-up

Get in touch with the contacts and presenters you met during the conference, especially if you are interested in learning more about or getting involved with any of their committees or projects.

Gather more information

Revisit the Conference Scheduler to “Attend” any programs of interest that you may not have flagged before; some presenters will upload meeting notes, slides, handouts, etc. after the conference. Marking the “Notify me of changes” box will allow you to receive automated e-mails anytime something changes on the page.

Share and learn

Review or type up your notes and share any new ideas with your colleagues. You’ve gathered a lot of great inspiration so keep the discussion going and see how you can implement what you’ve learned at your own library.
