

Conference Schedule Annual 2019

Friday, June 21, 2019

Guardians of the (Financial) Galaxy: How Financial Regulators Generate Free Data, Tools, and Information Along the Way

Please note: This is a ticketed preconference; registration is required.

Agenda: In the finance world there are 10+ financial agencies and federal watchdog groups committed to protecting consumers in the fast-moving realm of financial technology. Based in Washington, D.C. each regulator does something unique in service to public officials and other American citizens. Who are these agencies? What do they do? What output do they generate that will be of interest and use to patrons of business, economic, policy, and government librarians?

Time: 8:30 a.m.-4:00 p.m.

Location: Marriott Marquis

Federal Information Interest Group

Agenda: Have you ever wondered what data Census has and where it is published? The Census Bureau and the St. Louis Federal Reserve are proud to showcase our partnership by sharing the data we have and the tools to access it. We will share techniques for incorporating data in the classroom as well as ways that Census is exploring alternative data sources to supplement traditional surveys.

Time: 9:00-10:00 a.m.

Location: MAR Dogwood

Contact: Patricia Siska

Email: psiska@queenslibrary.org

Collectively Curating Government Information and Data: The PEGI Project and the Collective Impact Model

Agenda: The Collective Impact model provides an approach for organizations from various sectors to come together to address a shared concern. The PEGI Project explored using the Collective Impact model to create a national agenda, develop metrics, and bring interested parties together to work for the preservation of electronic government information. This panel will introduce the scope of the PEGI Project, describe the Collective Impact model, and explore ways in which the Collective Impact model will inform our work going forward.

Counting on Trust, Trusting the Count: Census 2020

Agenda: One of the major challenges facing the 2020 census is mistrust about how the collected information could be used by the government. Federal law restricts the Census Bureau from releasing information identifying individuals, but there is growing concern within some communities about a census process that has become politicized and divisive over a controversial citizenship question. By convening a panel of experts in census data and the social context for the census, we hope to learn how census information has been protected and potential risks to that confidentiality.
