A PUBLICATION OF THE GAY, LESBIAN, BISEXUAL TRANSGENDERED ROUND TABLE
OF THE AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

From the Editor

Hello, everyone!

I would like to introduce myself to you all as the new GLBTRT Newsletter Editor, Ken Wells. I have been working with Cal Zunt to get myself up to speed with this publication, and I am looking forward to providing the Round Table with interesting, timely information that will be both informative and entertaining.

I hope that all of you will feel free to contact me with any comments, suggestions and especially submissions! Thank you all for your help!

From the Co-Chairs

Hi everyone

I just want to say that I hope everyone had a great summer. It was good to see lots of folks in Atlanta. I believe we had a good turnout for the social and pretty good attendance at our Read Aloud and HIV information in Libraries programs.

I want to thank everyone that worked on getting pieces of the conference together for the Round Table. It takes a lot of people to make it a smooth show at the conference and I know several of you worked hard to put it together for us. Thanks again.

I want to say that I had a good year working with Faye Chadwell as co-chair and will miss talking to her as frequently as we did. I look forward to working with Anne Moore in the coming year and know I will call on her as much as I did Faye.

For those that were not in Atlanta and had not heard, the Awards Committee of ALA approves our request for a name change for the Book Awards. They are now officially the Stonewall Books Awards. They were both named after people instrumental in the starting of the original gay task force and keeping it going through those early years of our existence. So we will be awarding the Stonewall – Israel Fishman Book Award for Nonfiction and the Stonewall – Barbara Gittings Book Award for Literature. We hope to be able to better market the award in the community and beyond, with the simplicity of the name Stonewall Awards.

Remember that we are still seeking donations for the endowment of the Stonewall Book Awards. ALA President Mitch Freedman posted a note to the Round Table listserv letting us know he has been out recruiting for the endowment. Mitch told us a friend of his has donated $3000.00 to go to the endowment fund. Thank you Mr. Freedman and friend!

If any of you have ever gone looking for the winners of various literature awards, then I am sure that you have run across the following Web site. <http://www.literature-awards.com> The creator and Webmaster of the site is Jacqueline McElligott who attended ALA this year and she was at the Awards Breakfast in Atlanta. Jacqueline had the following to say about us in her newsletter that she sends out. Remember that she was there on a press pass and attended all the Book Awards Ceremonies.

"The 31st GLBTRT Book Award Breakfast and Celebration. This was, without a doubt the best ceremony I attended. I say this even though it was held at 7:30 AM! It was brilliant. No taped speeches, no cute book bags or posters, no do-dads. At each seat, get this...was a book! A great concept, no? Redbone Press publisher Lisa Moore could make a living simply reading. She was mesmerizing. Listening to her alone made it worth the trip. She was great, absolutely stellar! Even more spectacular to note is that she was reading someone else's words. The whole breakfast was a rewarding experience.

Now, the GLBTRT has been in existence 31 years. They need support, in libraries, communities, schools, wherever. After all this time, their membership stands at just over 500. Go to the ALA website, become a member for a few bucks and for a mere $12 bucks more you can support the GLBTRT. (The answer is 'yes, I have').

The GLBTRT committee announced that they have renamed their honors to The Stonewall Awards. An apt and welcome change and so much easier to say than "the GLBTRT Awards".

We didn't even have to pay her to say all that. Thank you Jacqueline and since you will be receiving this newsletter, welcome to the Round Table.

I look forward to another busy and exciting year.

Treasure's Update

The Roundtable accounts are looking good with over $11,000 on hand. The social and the book award breakfast were well attended and should produce some more operating fund income. The book award endowment fund in moving forward at a slow and steady pace. Between donations and pledges we are moving closer to the target of $40,000 but more money is needed in order to reach our goal. If you are interested in donating funds all you need to do is mail a check with a letter stating it is a donation for the book award endowment fund to the following address:

OLOS/ALA 50 East Huron Street Chicago IL 60611 attn Tanga Morris

At this time I wish to welcome all the new committee chairs, female cochair and secretary. Each person should get in contact with me so we can discuss any budget issues you may have, to make sure that you receive copies of the forms and the appropriate committee budget procedure.

The planning process has already begun for the next fiscal year and the draft budget is due at midwinter 2003. As part of this planning process all committee chairs should review their expenses for the past year and base budget line. If you need more funds budgeted please send me the dollar amount and the justification for the increase. If I do not receive any input the number will remain the same as the previous year.

As my last year begins, I am slowly putting the files in order and finishing up the writing the last of the budget procedures and thinking about what will I be doing in the future for the Roundtable. It is now time for people to think about declaring their candidacy for this job. The job is not very difficult and does not require a large amount of work. The person looking to hold this office should have some basic budget planning skills, the ability to read and understand financial statements and be conservative in spending money. Any interested candidates should email me with any questions regarding the position.

Book Awards Breakfast Committee Wrap-up or wonderful time in Atlanta

Thanks to all who participated in this year's Annual Book Awards Breakfast in Atlanta. Thanks especially to the Breakfast Planning Committee, Book Awards Committee and the Roundtable Steering Committee members who all provided much needed input. You all (hopefully) know who you are.

When the planning begins, one is never sure what the final outcome will be. Will the guest speaker bomb at the podium, or possibly bore us beyond belief? Will they observe the time restrictions? Will people like the breakfast? Adding to that, the fact that we were to begin at such an ungodly hour, put an added stress on the occasion - would everyone arrive on time?

Well...it is with great relief and much happiness that all reports back from this year's breakfast gave it high marks.

It all began with Lisa Moore's wonderfully honest approach to her pursuit of publishing quality works for lesbians women of color. Reading from her earthy "Bull-Jean Stories", Lisa held the attention of our bleary-eyed contingent, in fact, we all were hanging on each word and phrase. To say that one could not hear the music that usually accompanies these pieces...would be wrong.

Jim Grimsley has always been a welcomed guest to our group-and we haven't seen him at one of our large gathering since he one the award for Dream Boy. Anyone attending midwinter knew that Jim's new book "Boulevard" would be published by the time we met again in Atlanta, and we were anticipating a similar presentation to the one he gave in New Orleans, that being a reading from the book. However, Jim surprised us, and offered a touching reflection on the significance of libraries, our role as GLBT librarians, and the importance of gay writing. In one part he made reference to our stories...and "what it's like to know this unique, tangy, bitter, sweet concoction that comprises a sexual identity outside the norm of society. Once again, all of us were captivated. Thank you Jim.

One of the special treats at the breakfast was the appearance of John Sam Jones, author of Welsh Boys Too, which was an honor book in the Literature category. John was thrilled with our choosing his book as it opened up a significant door for him in his native country. The distinction provided him his trip to the United States, paid for by the British Council, as well as with a contract for a second book.

John spoke of the difficulty he faced attempting to mainstream GLBT subjects into his culture's mindset, so there is a great deal of significance in his work being supported the way it is. He was a delightful addition to our program...and an author we will be sure to follow.

Next to the podium was our GLBT Book Award Winner in the Literature category-Moises Kaufman, representing himself and the Tectonic Theatre Project and their magnificent creation "The Laramie Project". After a standing ovation, Moises also offered us a story of the significance of one librarian in his life who pointed him to works that would speak to him and what he was feeling as he grew into his identity as a gay man. With a great deal of graciousness, he discussed the magnificent experience in Laramie...something that inspired us at the moment, and continues to inspire us still.

After all this, what could possibly come next? Moises was a hard speaker to follow, but the 2002 GLBT Book Award Winner for non-fiction, Barry Werth stepped up to the podium and offered us a wonderful introduction to his study of Newton Arvin and the scandal that occurred at Smith college in the 50's which forced his retirement and ruin. "The Scarlet Professor" offers us a inside look at the virulence of American Puritanism, something we all know is still very much alive and kicking.

After the morning was finished, it was gratifying to hear that people were pleased. Needless-to-say, even though it's a year away, Toronto has assumed top priority in our planning. There are serious thoughts of moving from a breakfast to a lunch or brunch next year...so gay, eh?

The committee hopes to have its speakers in place prior to the publication of the January pre-conference issue of American Libraries...any suggestions?

Website Committee

As the new chair of the Web / Clearinghouse Committee, I have a tough act to follow. Keith Trimmer, LBGT internet maven extraordinaire - and who many of you know as the list manager of gay-libn - established, built, and maintained the GLBTRT web site for many years. He has done an outstanding job! And I'd like to take this opportunity to thank him and all the committee members that have worked so hard to put together and maintain this wonderful resource.

Our committee is responsible for maintaining the GLBTRT's web presence and for creating and disseminating LBGT resources developed by Round Table members and other interested GLBT librarians. Currently, there are two folks serving on the web committee, Lindsey Schell and TJ Lusher. Plus there are two subcommittees creating much needed resources:

The Children's Bibliography Subcommittee, which includes Nancy Silverrod (chair), Arla Jones, Walter M. Mayes, and Louis Howley, is hard at work on their list, which currently includes an annotated list of more than 60 book titles, in addition to magazines, videos, and websites aimed at children 0-12.

The Young Adult Bibliography Subcommittee, which includes Deborah Battisti (chair), Christine Jenkins, Catherine Jones, Jane Cothron, Karen Eckberg, Darla Linville, Andrew Hunter, and Katia Roberto, is likewise working on a bibliography of titles of interest to young adult readers.

We are looking at a transitional period as the web management responsibilities are transferred from Keith to our current committee. Look for updates as we progress!

If you are interested in learning more about our committee or would like to help out, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Book Award Committee

The Stonewall Book Award has been busy reading, reading, reading!
To date we have 20 nominations, mostly in the literature category.

Alas, the Committee needs your help. We don't want to miss your favorite book, so we want to hear from you! Think you've read something worthy of the oldest GLBT book award in the United States? Then send us your nominations.

All you have to do is give us the author/title of a book and explain why you think it deserves an award. Technical details follow:

1. Must be English-language books of exceptional merit relating to the gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered experience.
2. Publications from October 1, 2001 through September 30, 2002 will be accepted.
3. Reprintings of previously published books will not be considered. However, substantially changed new editions of previously published works and English translations of foreign-language books are eligible for the award.
4. Nominations will not be accepted from the author, publisher of a proposed book, agents or representatives of the author, or anyone else who may stand to gain directly from the nomination of the book.
5. Nominations will be accepted until October 31, 2002.

You've plenty of time to contribute, but don't wait! Send us your nomination NOW!

Send your nominations to: ebosman@iun.edu

From the Program Chair

Now that Atlanta is behind us, I'd like to thank all who made our programs a great success. Both the Read Out in the South and the HIV/AIDS Information Services program were a great success as was the annual social held at Outwrite Bookstore.

It is now time to start thinking about Toronto. Currently scheduled will be a Read Aloud, the social and two programs. In conjunction with the Intellectual Freedom Office we are offering "In Jeopardy? The Freedom to Read and Write GLBT Literature." The other program discussed is "The Glass Closet: Queers in High Places." The titles are still tentative and both programs are currently seen as panel discussions. I've already received offers of help and suggestions for speakers for both programs; any other offers and/or suggestions will be appreciated. For the Read Aloud we would like Canadian GLBT authors. I don't know a single one or if I do then I don't know they're Canadian. Please feel free to clue me in. You can either email me direct or post it to the listserv.

ALA Booth is a hit !!!

At minimum, our GLBT-RT Booth at Atlanta was not boring. At our best, I believe we provided valuable information, helpful tools, and lots of smiles. We made a difference. And picked up some new members along the way!

We started out with 1,000 condoms, donated by the Lee County (FL) Health Department, 200 dental dams, donated by my lovely dentist, Dr. Deborah Ruddell, and pounds and pounds of candy. We left with less than 100 condoms, no dental dams and no candy. Granted, most of the dental dams were taken from curiosity, but if one of them does its job, we "done good." The condoms went to a highly diverse group of librarians, many going to parents of teens. Very cool. If anyone feels compelled to thank our generous donors, I will happily send their names and addresses. It would be great to thank Alyson Publications for the copies of Chastity Bono's book, which they graciously donated as prizes. I had them signed, which was, gosh, a hard job, but someone had to do it and I was happy to do my part. Chastity was very sweet, and honored that librarians cared.

Now I know how Oscar winners feel. And it's good that I should learn now, since I do expect to receive one! I want to thank everyone who gave time, moral support, advice, and energy so happily, but I fear leaving someone out. But I must try. I beg forgiveness of anyone I left out (I OU big) First of all, thanks to Mom and Dad (Faye and Steve), without whose help and patience, I would have melted long before the booth became a reality. Anne. Norman. Cal. Ellen. Katie. Jane. Ron. Alvin. Damian. Roland. Andrea. Russ. Sherry. Jim. Darla. Walt. Lindsey. John. Rodney. Rob. Uh oh...the music is playing...

This year, we will have a real Membership Committee. With committee members! "If I live, I'll be great. I can hardly wait."

Attention AASL members...

Yes, all of you school librarians out there! Ever thought how nice it would be to make contact with other gay school librarians?? You know, swap ideas, recommend good books, and other fun things like that? Well, now you can! The GLBTRT has an AASL liaison by the name of Ken Stewart, a high school librarian. Get in contact with him and tell him you're interested. Remember: the AASL national convention is in Kansas City next year. We could give the annual "Dinner with a local librarian" a whole new twist!!

Library Lessons from Hotlanta

ATLANTA (June 17, 2002) - No one protested NIMBY-style, although a convention this week brought tens of thousands of educated, questioning types to town. In fact, no one seemed to notice much the hoardes of American Library Association (ALA) members browsing around town during their annual convention. We are, often good-naturedly, unnoticed with our thickened glasses, brown sweaters, and comfortable shoes.

Or so I thought until the morning of June 17th, when I witnessed the 31st annual presentation of the ALA Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, and Transgendered Book Award. Renamed the Stonewall Award just this week, it is the oldest book award of its kind. Librarians, it seems, created some three decades ago what is now the oldest book award devoted exclusively to recognizing the literary lot of the gay, the lesbian, the bisexual, and the transgendered.

Wow! and this, from a mousey bunch of bookends known for their one-syllable cry of shhh? There's obviously more to a librarian than (pardon my sexist slur) her looks.

These librarians did their award show in the expected, orderly and equitable fashion. Among the year's winners was Moises Kaufman and members of his Tectonic Theatre. They won the literature category for "The Laramie Project," which centers around the death of a young, white, gay man named Matthew Shepard. Kaufman, I should note, is a Jewish man of Venezuelan descent.

There's a lesson in here regarding diversity ... somewhere.

The morning's two keynote speakers were Emory writing guru Jim Grimsley, a middle-aged white man; and Lisa C. Moore, a youngish black woman who founded RedBone Press, which "focuses on work that celebrates the culture of black lesbians and promotes understanding between black gays and lesbians and black mainstream culture," according to the program.

Hmmm, culture. Preserving and investing in the human culture. Isn't that what libraries and librarians are all about?

The library is little more and yet a lot more, I would argue.

A bitter (not really!) 30-something Christian who's been laid off twice in three years, I hold a master's degree in library and information science. This qualifies me to carry the title, librarian, but I have sought and gained employment in corporate knowledge centers and market research departments, where I have consistently avoided the dreaded "L" word and even its upbeat sis, "cybrarian." There's a sermon lurking in these words regarding labels and self-acceptance.

More than one older librarian has cautioned me "to think outside the book," to avoid the stereotyped job title altogether. Not a bad idea, considering the better salary, the sometime-higher level of professional respect, and the evolving face and definition not only of librarianship, but of all industries in our global knowledge-centered economy. Ours is a turbulent time, what with Internet speed, eBooks and MP3s, an oft-clandestine seemingly world war in the mix, and age-old cultural tensions and prejudices that unite and divide.

I return to the thought of my fellow librarians by any name, the custodians of cultures. I think of Ms. Moore, who founded an alternative press to emphasize black lesbians' contributions to the human record. Her father, she said at this morning's presentation, remarked to her recently that one of her press' lesbian-centered books was a romance that he could understand. He could see the storyline plausibly developing between two black women, even between two white men. The daughter was pleased and herself somewhat astounded, even in her own retelling of the episode drawn from her life.

It seems we all have something to learn in stories. The greatest lessons appear to be about ourselves and they are often taught through the retelling of tales, hearing ourselves in the stories of our cultures, lessons preserved in the storehouses of humanity. That can be difficult, even painful, 'most anywhere, much less the American South, which is after all, not so unlike any other place humans have trod upon through the millennia.

On this hot near-summer day, I see how fitting that the American Library Association would bring its thousands, and its book award, to the South's capital city in the year 2002, in the month of Gay Pride. Both groups have certifiably monumental roles to play in our human culture. They always have and should. In the case of librarians (and particularly gay librarians), they -- with or without their hair buns or shh's -- can quietly teach us about our world, and things we don't necessarily or readily like, admire, or accept about each other or ourselves.

The Invisible Families

The protection, nurture, and education of children by adults are fundamental to human life.¹

Despite conventional ideas by many that a family ideally should be composed of one father, one mother and their biological children it is clear this traditional definition no longer reflects the realities of a considerable number of households in our society. Due to factors such as high divorce rates, single parenthood and more couples not bothering to marry, the concept of family is being redefined. Another significant force helping to reinvent and broaden the definition of the American family are gay men and lesbians choosing, in increasing numbers, to become parents and raise children. Research estimates the total number of children nationwide living with at least one gay parent ranges from six to 14 million.² A casual stroll thru any large urban gay neighborhood one is likely to encounter infants in baby slings, toddlers in jogger strollers and little leaguers in tow to games. For the first time in gay and lesbian history children are becoming a clearly visible and growing part of our culture. Do libraries have a responsibility to support and provide resources for these children and their parents, and if so, how can this best be done?

To answer these questions a very casual (and admittedly unscientific) e-mail and phone survey of several library systems across the United States was conducted. Of the approximately twenty urban and rural systems that were sampled none currently has services specific (or plans to develop them) for gay and lesbian families and their children. When asked if they thought such services might be needed most said yes, but because these families were not highly visible (even in large metropolitan areas) the need had not yet been identified. A smaller number of participants were asked what type of services and resources would they develop if it became apparent this population existed in their community. The following are some of their suggestions:
Collection Development

Because subject specific resources for gay and lesbian families are severely limited collection development librarians should intentionally seek out and purchase materials (books, magazines, films, etc) to address the myriad legal, psychological, child rearing, and parenting issues this population faces. Children's literature (easy readers and junior fiction) should be expanded beyond the classic's Heather has Two Mommies and Daddies Roommate (two titles that appear on almost every list of challenged books) to include titles such as When Grownups Fall in Love by Barbara Lynn Edmonds, ABC A Family Alphabet Book by Bobbie Combs, Desire Keane and Brian Rappa and 123 A Family Counting Book by

Bobbie Combs and Danamarie Hosler. Other gay and lesbian affirming titles such as Lucy Goes to the Country by Joseph Kennedy and John Canemaker should also be included.

Material Access

Insure gay and lesbian family materials are available in subject specific areas and the regular stacks. Too often titles such as the above mentioned Heather Has Two Mommies and Daddies Roommate are relegated to non-fiction under sociology or parenting classification rather than the picture-book section where they belong. In fact why not have multiple copies in both areas?

Vertical file Resources

Hard copy resources such as news clippings, journal articles, publications from parenting organizations, copies of studies on the children of gays and lesbians, information on local parenting groups and resources could be gathered for a vertical file.

Journal Subscriptions

Subscriptions such as Gay Parent magazine and others that provide a positive and healthy perspective on alternative families including cross-cultural, single parenthood, and children being raised by grandparents could be added to the serial collection.

Internet Resources

Provide links to websites such as Proudparenting.com, list-serve information, regional support organizations and groups, legal referrals and legislation as standard bookmarks on public research terminals.

Children's Programs

Actively seek out and encourage these gay and lesbian families to attend story-hour and include alternative family stories and themes in these and other programs.

Posters and Exhibits

Include same gender parents in poster displays and photographs of library-sponsored events. Perhaps even include them when designing public relations materials and exhibits.

Policies and Practices

Insure gays and lesbians and their children as well as other alternative families are specifically mentioned in nondiscriminatory language in library bylaws and mission statements.

Sensitivity Training

Train library staff to be aware that gay and lesbian families exist and the parents and children should be treated with dignity and respect.

Needless to say gay and lesbian families are a volatile and hotly debated topic that unfortunately is more often fueled by emotional bias rather than rational thought. Libraries can play an invaluable role in providing resources and support for these families to form, function and flourish if library administrations take the courage to do so. As gay and lesbian families with children become more visible they become another symbol of the slow but inexorable mainstreaming of gays and lesbians into the larger society. Proving support and resources for these families will undoubtedly become standard for library operations. If the results of this informal survey are any indication librarians are not only well prepared but eager to address the needs of these rapidly expanding patron population. The challenge will be in overcoming the inevitable challenges these services and resources will bring from less than accepting viewpoints.

Report from the Leather Archives

The Leather Archives and Museum, which originated in a proposal put forward by Chuck Renslow, creator of the International Mr. Leather contest, in the autumn of 1992, exemplifies the diversity and range of types of historical materials necessary to document the life of a gay and lesbian subculture. Its first public space was in a storefront on Clark Street in Chicago adjacent to the Chicago Eagle leather bar, quarters which were inadvertently immortalized in a promotional video narrated by the late Dr. Anthony De Blase, designer of the widely-adopted leather flag. As word of the existence and purpose of the collection spread, holdings quickly mushroomed through donations by individuals and leather-related organizations to the point that by 1998 locating a new home was imperative. Under the direction of writer and artist Joseph Bean (who assumed the directorship in 1997) the Archives found an ideal space at 6418 N. Greenview Avenue near Loyola University in a building which at various times has been a synagogue, two types of church, and a theater. Collections were transferred to the new site in 1999 and a capital campaign begun with the expectation of completing mortgage payments by the 2004 deadline. In 2001 Bean completed his term and was succeeded by current director Rick Storer.

Holdings of the LAM were founded on the private collection of oil paintings and line drawings created by Renslow's late partner Dom Orejudos (better known as the artist Etienne), although runs of major leather community periodicals such as Drummer and The Leather Journal were soon added, beginning the growth of a periodical collection reaching from the 1940s to date and representing a spectrum of opinion from Justice Weekly to The ADVOCATE. Renovation of the Terri Rose Library is currently underway. Of unique value are the files of several hundred newsletters chronicling the work and activities of leather and levi clubs, organizations and businesses worldwide. Other formats collected include photographs and films from the physique studios of the 1950s and 1960s, clothing (which covers formal club uniforms and vests as well as a growing body of T-shirts from bars, runs, contests and various events), oral histories, the official archives of the National Leather Association, the International Gay Rodeo Association, and the Chicago Hellfire Club as well as all International Mr. Leather contests, and commercial and privately produced videotapes. A special collection of note is the Colors Project, dedicated to the assembly and preservation of the varied insignias and heraldic devices created as designs for backpatches and formal organizational logos for leather social and motorcycle clubs. An unusual part of the LAM is the Pin Collection (currently numbering several thousand items), which takes as its focus the various types of pins created, exchanged, and worn within the leather community as event memorabilia, organizational and personal friendship pins, an important yet ephemeral art form.

Outreach to and participation in the library profession was a part of the Archives structure from the beginning. As an institution, the Leather Archives contributes to the Subject Authority Cooperative (SACO) program which allows for the proposal of new headings for the LC classification system, through the work of Adam Schiff, principal cataloger of the University of Washington, who has successfully submitted seven new headings, with three more awaiting decision. The first formal presentation made to a general librarians' audience detailing the Archives' origin and purpose was the presentation made by staff librarian Rob Ridinger in New Orleans on June 28, 1999 as part of the GLBTRT program "Daring To Save Our History", with regular updates since provided to the GLBTRT executive committee at ALA conferences. Further information about the Archives and its collections, hours and opportunities to visit, research and volunteer can be found at the website, <http://www.leatherarchives.org/> or by phone at 773-761-9200.

Task Force On Restrictions On Access To Government Information, Conference Update, 2002 ALA Annual

Gary Cornwell and Duncan Aldrich, co-Chairs

<http://www2.library.unr.edu/dept/bgic/duncan/ragi.html>

Attending: Steve Hayes, Dan Barkley, Patrice McDermott, Sherry DeDecker, Jerry Reynolds, Prue Adler, Mary Alice Baish, Sue Davidson, Bernadine Abbott Hoduski, June Pinnell-Stephens, Cathy Hartman, Laura Dickson, Cindi Wolf, Bessie Condos Tichaver, Lynne Siemers, Jan Fryer, Ridley Kessler, Tom Andersen, Joan Moffson, Mary Wilke, Jan Comfort, Ann Sullivan, Peter Watson-Boone, Rebecca Watson-Boone, Robert Walter, Minnie Crump, James B. Casey, Gary Cornwell, Duncan Aldrich.

The Task Force (TF) met on Friday, June 14, from 10:00am to Noon. Following introductions, Co-Chair Gary Cornwell outlined the charge of the TF and delineated goals for this meeting. The session's goals were:

- 1) To review briefly the assumptions stated in the TF Framework document to assure that there was a consensus;
- 2) To get the TF's subgroups together to select subgroup chairs and layout plans for their segments of the TF's final report; and
- 3) To determine if the TF had any immediate action items that should be moved through this ALA Conference.

Before the participants broke into the four subgroups, Patrice McDermott of the ALA Washington Office provided an overview of the current situation and key issues

The subgroups (Historical Context, Current Crisis, Legal Opinions, Advocacy) spent the rest of the meeting in breakout groups and their activities are reported below.

The time frame for the TF's work will be to have drafts – or near drafts – of subgroup reports ready for final organizational work by Midwinter (January 2003). Final drafts are due February for dissemination for review by all ALA units in March, April, and May. The Final Report will be submitted to the ALA Committee on Legislation at 2003 Annual Conference.

Historical Context Subgroup

Jan Fryer, chair, Cindi Wolf, Sue Davidson, Pam Klipsch

The history subgroup decided to facilitate the writing of its portion of the TF report by dividing the period from World War I into four segments: WWI – WWII; WWII – 1950; the McCarthy era – 1970; and 1970 to 9/11. Each member of the subgroup is responsible for researching and drafting one of the four segments. Besides summarizing efforts to restrict the public's access to government information, the subgroup will incorporate the actions/reactions of ALA, libraries, and Congress to the efforts to restrict.

Current Crises Subgroup

Ridley Kessler, chair, Laura Dickson, Cathy Hartman, Becky Butler, Jerry Reynolds, Patrice McDermott

The Current Crises Subgroup (CCS) immediately asked GODORT Legislation and the COL-Government Information Subgroup to draft a resolution addressing the "sensitive but unclassified materials" section of the Card Memo. The CCS also asked that GODORT and COL-GIS draft a resolution about a General Accounting Office memo requiring names of people asking for certain types of FOIA information about seemingly innocuous materials that might be used by terrorists.

Additionally, the Current Crises group asked GODORT to organize a watch dog group to gather documentation on instances where libraries are approached by FBI, government officials, government contractors and others connected to the government investigating government information access and individuals and/or libraries using this material or housing it. The TF has asked GODORT to share their findings with OMBWatch.

After discussion the CCS decided to include in the draft report summaries of the Card Memo/ ISOODOJ (aka Weapons of Mass Destruction and Sensitive But Unclassified information), the Ashcroft Memo (tighter restrictions on FOIA information and a less open policy), and other recent actions concerning the removal or restriction of access to online government information. The group will also include discussion on the dangers inherent in these restrictions and possibly suggest other resolutions against such restrictive information policies. The CCS also hopes for future resolutions at Midwinter on the need for agency and administration guidelines for reviewing FIOA requests and WEB Site creation and removal. The resolutions should request that these guidelines be available for public input and review and that this information be as open as possible.

Advocacy Subgroup

Sherry DeDecker, chair, Jean Comfort, Prue Adler, Lynne Siemers, Bessie Tichner, Gladys Ann Wells

The group will focus its report under three categories:

- 1) Strategies: Gather lists to include:
 - a. Adopt-an-agency
 - b. Sample letters to Congress
 - c. Talking points
 - d. Possible tie into @your library campaign
 - e. Press packet assembled by GODORT Education, etc.
- 2) Develop a glossary of terms: Begin with FAS list, send out call for additional terms to listserv. Final list will be an appendix to the report.
- 3) Coalition Building : Will find partners for coalition building on national, state, and local levels. Examples are RTK, FAS, scientific community, library associations, state libraries, grass roots organizations. Will provide guidance on who/how to contact for advocacy, education.

To support ongoing advocacy efforts, the subgroup will have a preliminary outline by September 1 and a more complete list by October 1.

Legal Opinion Subgroup

Steve Hayes, Chair, June Pinnell-Stephens, Mary Alice Baish, Jane Sessa

- 1) Solicit a set of legal opinions that explore issues not addressed in the Susman Memo, such as the question of non-depository materials, possible relationship between depository law and FOIA. Explore further funding for legal opinions from private or internal ALA sources.
- 2) Guidance on liability and other legal issues – for both depository and other libraries.
- 3) Explore in the context of restrictions on and removal of government information: constitutional issues such as the right of access; right of appeals.
- 4) Develop principles that would guide agencies in their decisions to disseminate, withdraw, or restrict access to information.
- 5) Review the "Principles for Networked Environment" in the context of the current crisis.
- 6) Examine state confidentiality and privacy laws as they apply to private and public institutions. Gather resource information, including OIF list of state privacy acts, state reconsideration of confidentiality laws, Permanent Public Access Report, and state level access legislation or legal opinions, including any state Patriot Acts that mimic federal level access environment? State ALA chapter councilors and state GODORT groups will be asked for information on these topics.

ALA 2002: Adult Literacy

ALA Pre-Conference Program, "Different Voices, Common Quest Adult Literacy and Outreach in Libraries June 13-14, 2002

This program was initiated as a way to share ideas to develop and implement outreach strategies to marginalized populations. One of the components, along with immigrants, the incarcerated and so forth was outreach to GLBT populations; we were one category among about a 10 or so. The food was good and the speakers were enlightening as well as encouraging with their rhetoric of that we as simple librarians can do to make the world and our communities a better, fairer place. Months before I had been asked to facilitate for those who were interested in developing their services to gays and lesbians as well as the transgendered. I have been involved with doing just that for a while now through my own library system. I was looking forward to this program, had assembled a presentation package just for this event and brushed up on my facilitator capabilities. Was I in for a disappointment, not in the program or the way it was organized, but in the fact that not one of my fellow librarians had thought it important enough to sign-up for the GLBT outreach facilitation sessions. Not a one. Steve Stratton and I were the lone librarians at our GLBT Outreach table (which is another story in itself – we faced a hostile advocate of library services to the incarcerated who told us we had no right to be in the same room as her group. Prisons and homosexuals no possible connection, right?).

For the few hours that the facilitation segment ran, Steve and I sat alone and were a little amazed that not one person thought that outreach to our community was worth it. Maybe we were being a tad on the sensitive side, but it bothered us. After all our population was the one that could be found in all the other focus groups. The elderly, uh huh, rural, yep, immigrants, si, the incarcerated...well you get the point; we are everywhere and we deserve dedicated services, just like everyone else.

This response, or lack of one, leads me to believe that a survey needs to be done among librarians and within libraries to find out just what type of service is specifically being given to queer library users. There are some funds out there for library related projects and we need to see if we can use them to develop a survey or related project that will give this roundtable an idea of what type of library services are out there and what work needs to be done to improve them. One thing the pre-conference demonstrated is: that if WE don't take the initiative to serve our own no one else is going to.

A Chill in the Library

© St. Petersburg Times, published July 23, 2002

Under the USA-Patriot Act, passed by Congress in the wake of the Sept. 11 attacks, librarians have been made unwitting partners in the FBI's search for potential terrorists. Any records a library might retain on a patron's reading choices or Internet use are now retrievable by federal law enforcement with an easily obtainable court order. Librarians, traditionally defenders of intellectual freedom, are being pressed to become extensions of law enforcement, and many are balking at the new job description. Librarians, traditionally defenders of intellectual freedom, are being pressed to become extensions of law enforcement, and many are balking at the new job description.

Judith Krug, the American Library Association's director for intellectual freedom, has been advising librarians who think this new use of library records is antithetical to their mission. She proposes establishing a system of regular record deletions to put information on patron's tastes and interests out of reach well before the FBI comes to call.

Krug notes that the Patriot Act eliminates the need to show probable cause before invading a patron's privacy. The new law allows the FBI to go to a secret foreign intelligence court, claim the information desired is part of a terrorism investigation and walk away with a court order allowing it to take a look at all the Internet traffic emanating from a library on a particular day.

Moreover, librarians are prohibited from disclosing anything about law enforcement's visit.

Some library professionals may relish their new role. At the Lely campus of Edison Community College in Collier County, library staff recently contacted campus security about three Middle Eastern-looking men who were whispering while using library computers to look up Islamic newspapers. That call in turn prompted a call to the Collier County Sheriff's Office, which dispatched deputies to seize the library's computer hard drives for further investigation.

Mary Faulkner, library director, said her staff acted correctly in contacting security and refused to comment further. But the situation raises disturbing questions. What exactly was suspicious about the behavior of these men: Whispering in a library? Reading newspapers in their native language? Being Middle Eastern?

The Patriot Act is trying to remake librarians into citizen spies, and while some librarians have slipped happily into that role, many others are raising concerns. Do you suddenly feel a chill in our public libraries?

Book Review

"It has often been noted that in the Western tradition homosexuality was first called the sin of sodomy, then regarded as the crime of buggery, next was considered the disease of psychological inversion, but now has become like an ethnicity. And where sinners are condemned, criminals are imprisoned, and psychological inverts are hospitalized, members of ethnic groups participate in politics."

These words are the opening to the preface of Gay and Lesbian Americans and Political Participation: A Reference Handbook, by Raymond A. Smith and Donald P. Haider-Markel. This very useful reference book is part of the Political Participation Series which examines different political groups in America. The first chapter contains basic definitions and demographics of the LGBT population in the United States and a short history of the LGBT political movement. The second chapter expands into a detailed history of LGBT political involvement focusing on protest politics from the Stonewall Riots to contemporary Pride marches. Further chapters detail, "Interest Group and Social Movement Participation," "Electoral and Political Party Participation," and "Being 'Out' in Public Life." There are sections on documents and legislation concerning LGBT people, key players and terms, a chronology, and useful resources. All chapters end with references and suggested further reading. This book is written in a clear, interesting style, and will be a welcome addition to any library. It provides a solid introduction to the LGBT political movement, and encourages the reader to both read more on this subject and become politically involved.
