Anaheim Ice (formerly Disney Ice)

Frank Gehry designed this 90,000 square-foot indoor ice rink complex in 1995. Michael Eisner, Disney's former CEO, commissioned Gehry to create a training and practice rink for the Anaheim Ducks, a National Hockey League team. The exterior of the building is sculptural and the interior utilizes wooden trusses to evoke the Canadian hockey rinks Gehry grew up with. Disney sold the Anaheim Ducks and the complex in 2005, but the space remains in operation under new ownership.

Phone: 714-518-3200

Resort District

This area is home to two Disney Parks: Disneyland and California Adventure, as well as the Anaheim Convention Center, convention hotels and a Downtown Disney shopping complex. In the 1950s and 1960s when Disneyland was developing, the area was dominated by Googie architecture, a kitschy mix of space-age shapes and signage designed for Southern California car culture. The City of Anaheim, Disney, and the Anaheim/Orange County Visitor and Convention Bureau have redeveloped the area to create a resort environment that features lush landscaping, pedestrian avenues, and traffic thoroughfares have redeveloped the area.

Team Disney Anaheim

Frank Gehry designed this 295,000 square-foot administrative building for Disney in 1995. The building provides workspace for the 1,200 administrative and support staff employees of the Disney Resort. Gehry's inspiration for the building was Disney's Goofy cartoon character, and accordingly the building features whimsical yellow walls and other cartoonish flourishes. The building is located on the edge of the Disneyland Resort, between ToonTown and the Santa Ana Freeway.

Neighboring Areas

Crystal Cathedral

A massive structure of white steel trusses and silver-colored glass, the Crystal Cathedral was designed by Philip Johnson and John Burgee in 1981 to fulfill Dr. Robert Schuller's vision of a worship space for his Christian congregation of over 10,000 members. The glass walls and ceiling are designed to replicate the outdoor, drive-in church where the congregation began in 1955, and two 90 foot-tall doors behind the pulpit open electronically during the Sunday morning services to let in the natural environment. The church also serves as a studio of for the weekly "Hour of Power" television program and features and giant indoor "Jumbotron" screen.
